RESILIENT HAPPINESS

Are you expanding toward your greatest potential?

Successful career fulfillment is an important achievement that shapes facets of our identities. Sometimes, however, once we’ve reached that goal post, changes and life transitions leave us yearning for a deeper sense of purpose and meaning. If we ignore this calling, our routines may breed monotony or boredom; our zest for life withers. Sharing recent research from a design-thinking approach, Dr. Camacho offers insights for new and mid-career professionals on re-learning to lead all parts of your life by taking risks, building a resilient spirit, and expanding a personal capacity for happiness.

About Our Speaker

Dr. Michelle M. Camacho is Professor and Faculty Administrator at the University of San Diego. Trained as a socio-cultural anthropologist, her PhD is interdisciplinary from the University of California, Irvine. Her research has been awarded continuous funding by the National Science Foundation to investigate inequities in higher education, specifically as they relate to the low numbers of women and minorities in Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM). As an advocate of community-based research, she also researches the pathways of military veterans as they transition to higher education. She is co-author of three books and over 20 peer-reviewed articles. In 2015-2016 she was selected to be a Fellow of the American Council on Education, and currently serves on the board of the Council of Fellows. Her teaching and research awards include: the University Professor Award, the highest academic honor bestowed university-wide; the Innovation in Experiential Education Award; the McNair Mentor of the Year award; and a Fulbright Scholar award. Dr. Camacho has taught at the university-level since 1993, and was recently selected by the University of Virginia Arlington to teach aboard the Semester-at-Sea ship, a voyage that circumnavigated the globe. Her three children and husband joined her on this adventure across the Pacific Ocean to visit 13 countries including Vietnam, India, and Namibia. Her hobbies include teaching group fitness; you can find her giving weekly classes at the Bay Club in Carmel Valley.
